Dear Lorraine, It has been two years now since God called you home. I have been crying, remembering teh call from the charge nurse, telling me that the cerebral edema caused your brain stem to snap, and that you were unable to sustain your life without a ventilator, and that I was to come to the hospital with the priest, and with my friend T. Scott, to remove you from life support, so you could finally rest. I cried there at your bedside for half an hour before bringing in the priest to give you the Last Rites and to let you go home. Strange coincidence that this evening, I was building a new drum kit for a gig this weekend and your eyeglasses were in their case on the shelf next to the drum kit. I looked at those delicate little eyeglasses and remembered seeing your pretty blue eyes looking at me with so much love. I remember your beautiful red hair and your wonderful sense of humor, and how you were so gracious to everyone around you. You are home now, with God, at peace and in heaven. Things are OK here, but not the same without you. Yes, I know you would tell me to move on, and I am doing my best, but miss you so much my darling. I pray that you are at peace now and no longer suffering, and hope we will see you again someday. All my love, Frank
